of his people."

The weather was unusually mild for January-temperatures in the 50s with a bright sun-as the prince and his wife arrived for a two-day Washington visit. Mr. Nixon said Spain and the United States were "partners in defense and partners in progress in our economic programs.

The prince, designated in 1969 by Generalissimo Francisco Franco, 78, to take his place when the dictator decides but that this visit has "a new and deeper significance" since his designation as future king and ruler.

"Today, nations cannot live in isola-tion," the prince said. "Our world must cope with problems often of a universal nature. Spain wishes to live in close harmony with all nations respecting their national characteristics and we must come to know one another to better our mutual understanding."

Juan Carlos can speak English but he made his remarks in Spanish at the cere-. mony.

Following the White House welcome, the prince had a conference with Mr.

Nixon followed by a luncheon meeting with Secretary of State William P. Rogers at the State Department, President and Mrs. Nixon are giving a state dinner for the prince and his wife, Greek Princess Sophia, tonight.

Before flying to the West Coast, Juan Carlos also will confer with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which has been highly critical of the U.S.-Spanish agreement renewed last August on U.S. bases in Spain.

The prince and princess will stop in San Diego, then at the space center in Houston, on the way back to the East Coast to view the launch Sunday of the Apollo-14 moon flight. The couple will. then return to Spain.

It was during this time that Mrs. Manson, then 22, and her older brother went to prison for two years for robbery, when Charles was 6. But throughout those early

The First Point

The governments of Egypt, Jordan and Israel seem to be taking all too seriously the first point of the 14 that President Wileon enunciated to Congrese and the world, just a little more than 53 years ago. That point

"Open covenants of peace openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings of any kind, but diplomacy shall proceed always frankly and in the public view."

That is to say, the three governments have been conducting their negotiatione with one another on the vital questions that divide Arab and Israeli "in the public view." That all three have "private international underetandings" of one kind or another goes without saying: it is on the central issoes, those which were to have been explored through the Jarring mission, that the three are exchanging public statements.

President Wilson gave priority to the concept of diplomacy conducted in the public view because World War I had arisen from a medley of secret and semi-secret understandinge, and was being fought, in addition to some much-publicized goals, to achieve a variety of secret and semi-secret aims. His intentions were excellent, but he failed to recognize the acute disadvantages of negotiations conducted in the public view: the tendency to freeze asking prices in bargaining and to make every concession seem a net loss.

When Egypt's president, for example, announces openly that he will not currender an inch of territory, or Israel's premier places primacy on strategic frontiers. defensible by Israel itself, retreat becomes difficult and rational solutions almost impossible. There is nothing particularly sacred about some acres of desert, nor do they insure either security or defeat. But national pride can be invested in the one idea, and national fears and aspirations in the other. Governments can rise or fall on the tenacity by which such concepte are defended, while the main goal of a reasonable settlement, based on facts, not on theories of sovereignty or strategy, remains in the background.

To the extent that President Wilson coupled actual peace proposals with his hopee for open covenants, openly arrived at the Fourteen Points (and their author) have suffered at history's hands. Everyone was disappointed by the treatles that emerged from World War I, and none more than the generation that had to fight World War II. Cen Israeli or Arab expect complete satisfaction from whatever diplomatic conclusion is made to the 1967 war? Should not the goal he to prevent war in 1971 or later? And is a square inch of Egyptian soil or a "strategic" frontier worth that grim possibility? Above all, are the transient and largely illusory pleasures of venting hopes, hostilities and fears in public worth the risks that process involves? The first point of negotiation is not publicity, but agree-

The Fate of Alaska

The Department of the Interior's draft statement on the proposed Alaskan oil pipeline is impressive. It presents the government's first comprehensive view on the pipeline's probable impact on the environment-including not only those dangers that might be overcome by standards to be set for its construction but also those that the department concedes cannot be overcome at all. In the end the report favors the careful building of the line, not because it would be altogether safe but because in the department's opinion the harm it would do would be outweighed by considerations of national security and America's oil position in the world market. In this conclusion we think the department has overreached itself.

The reasonable tone and prudent approach of the report are far removed from the cavaller attitude with which the oil companies originally proceeded to bring pipe, equipment and labor into Alaska for what promised to be a quick and heedless exploitation of the land. On this score alone, the protests of conservationists and the delays or are seen to have been fully justifled.

In spite of the report's merits, however, we do not feel that it should pave the way of an immediate approval of the pipeline. First, even the damage conceded by its authors would be serious to fish and wildlife, to wilderness, to vegetation and to the entire cultural pattern of the region, thoughaccording to the department-iess than that which many conservation experts are sure would occur. Second, it seems inconceivable. either in law or simple justice, that the project would be launched until the native claims to the land are fully and satisfactorily settled. And, not least, a policy choice of such far-reaching consequence, posing the nation's fuel needs, its relations with other countries and the balance of trade against the future of the largest of its states, should not be left to the single decision of the Department of the Interior, even if it wins ultimately far more grandiose. the approval of the Council on Environmen-

The resources of Alaska have been rightly compared in magnitude with "all the fjords of Norway, all the game of Kenya, all the rivers of Brazil, all the coasts of Spain. all the peaks of New Zealand, all the seas of Britain and all the natural resources of Mexico." Certainly the President and his chief counsels should weigh the choices involved. Indeed, since 95 percent of that great state is still federal land, Sen. Case of veto power would dwindle; and a New Jereey has good ground for suggesting real thaw would disintegrate exthat Congress itself review the facts on the pipeline and make the ultimate judgment vocates of this Ostpolitik think any

Nixon's Program

The programs themselves are useful so far as they go. The welfare reform is meant to provide a minimum income for the poor. although critics have pointed out that it will also provide a maximum (which in New York and New Jersey at least will be lower then the present eciling). The reorganization of government departments could probahly improve efficiency if there were any chance that Congress would pass it, which there is not.

If none of the measures gets through, then Mr. Nixon will not be considered excessively partisan if he points out in a year's time that the Congress that blocked them was Democratic.

-From the Guardian (London). * * *

In his State of the Union message, Nixon left a big blank: the Vletnam conflict and its disquieting extension of American intervention in Cambodia. For Mr. Nixon and his advisers, the war is now a thing of the past. In a few months, there will no longer be American combat units in Vietnam.

The Nevy and Air Force will remain there to help those who need them. With this assistance, the South Vietnamese will be quite able to resist another "Tet offensive." If they do not manage to do so, well, lt'e too bad! The United States will not send other Gis to fight in rice-paddies. As for the airmen and sailors, it will not be difficult to evacuate them, should the occasion arise.

Mr. Nixon thue practices a policy formerly known as "When we are gone, let happen what may." He doee so with an apparently flawless honesty: Has he not always declared that the United States would help only those who help themselves?

-From Les Echos (Paris).

Heath and South Africa

The Singapore conference has given Mr. Heath time to think again about his arms plan and provided him with an bonorable way out of his decision if he wishes to take it. He should do so. For there can now be no doubt that the damage to the Commonwealth and to British economic interests caused by arms salee to South Africa would be no token affair quickly forgotten. But more important perhape is that even if there were not a single Commonwealth member in Africa, it would still be a disastrous mistake for Britain and for the future of the West in the continent if the British were to reactivate their military alliance with South Africa and consolidate it with arms sup-

-From the Observer (London).

The Commonwealth has survived, only just, and in spite of the fact that the Singapore prime ministers' conference provided an object lesson on how such meetings ehould not be conducted. The debate on frustration, Nixon said. Let us say, South African arms was conducted with the chance. We are going to give you maximum of bitterness, with public threats a new chance to have more to say and with very little effort at understanding other people's point of view. The debate eet the whole tone of the conference and it prevented a thorough discussion of other problems of importance.

If the tactics of the opponents, particularly some of the African states, had been specifically designed to drive Mr. Heath to sell the arms, let the devil teke the Commonwealth, they could hardly have been better choeen.

"We never had a situation like this where two states are based upon policies which can never be reconciled. I don't believe in a mishmash. with Herr Ulbricht in East Berlin. I cannot see how a confederation could work between a state economy one one side and a market economy on the other, quite apart from the very conflicting bases of the two states."

Putting aside such concrete ideas, Brandt hopes to use the common national heritage of both Germany's, their language, culture and tradition, to lessen the distance between them. Today, he says, it is easier for him to visit Japan or Kenya than East Germany.

Doubts on Peace Treaty He admits that his vague concept inferentially acknowledging the existence of two German states and a special status for West Berlin is not too far removed from Khrushthen the President added: "The further away government is from people, the stronger government becomes and the weaker people become. And a nation with a strong government and a weak people is an empty shell."

Nixon was specifically addressing himself to domestic affairs; he made clear that he would take up foreign policy in a later message. When he does, however, he is gong to find it hard to avoid the clear meaning of this ringing promise to let Americans "have more to say" about government policy; he can hardly suggest that the people's frustrations and his own piedges run only to the water's edge.

Cambodia suggests that in going about what it conceives to be its business in Southeast Asia, the administration is managing to rise above what a great many people have already had to say. This is a classic case of two-way reasoning the Lon Nol regime may not be supported directly, bot American troops may not be endangered; hence the Lon Nol regime can he supported directly because otherwise American troops will be endangered.

But Secretary of Defense Laird was not willing to rest on this stunning proposition. American air operations in Cambodia, he says, are also justified by the Nixon doctrinewhich, somehow, had therefore been pictured as a contraction, not an expansion, of the American combat presence in Southeast Asia and the world. Moreover, Laird claims that the use of air power in Vietnam was specifically permitted by Congress because it was not specifically prohibited.

All of this graphically demonstrates what the Senate feared all along—that the involvement in Cambodia would lead inevitably to further involvement, as had al-ready happened in South Vietnam and that in pursuit of its own ends the military juggernaut proval of the invasion and the would take any step not precisely Senate's clear intent to avoid a forbidden to it. Cardin Reinvents The Mini

By Eugenia Sheppard
PARIS, Jan. 26.—Anything can happen at Pietre Cardin and it did. Cardin brought back the mini-dress with a bloused top and a little pleated skirt at least six inches above the knees. He slit many of his new fashions to the waistline at both sides to show het pants. With his soft, sheer fabrics floating around visible tights and shorts, it was next to impossible to tell whether the girls were dressed for the beach or for a ball.

"Skirts are short again. I like them that way," said Cardin after his opening this morning

The show was one of those extra good Cardin performances that hits you like a ton of bricks, knocks the wind out of you for a ofinute but leaves you feeling fine. It went on, as usual, to spooky music, in the part of Cardin's reconditioned old Paris theater that he calls simply Pierre Cardin's Space. In two hours of super showmanship. Cardin plays with geometric forms. His long triangular ponchos cover tights and Triangular pennants stream from his skirts. The flying saucer is everywhere, making skirt and dress fronts. round tunics and even the cuffs of pants. At one point the models wear square hats, and Cardin eren tries his hand at a square dress. It's not all geometry, though. Often Cardin lapses into somethin, more romantic in a ruffled shirt or two and a few dresses with cartridge-pleated collars and ruffled bems.

He never forgets the state occasion dresses for customers like Mrs. Willy Brandt. who came to the opening in a gray suit and chinchilla nat.

Cardin shows lots of suede and leather for daytime. His knee-length, black-leather tu-nics, some of them decorated with zodlac signs, are open at the sides to show leather shorts. He carries the slit story into knee-length, belted dresses of tweed and jersey that leave the little shorts in full view.

With everything but active sports clothes. Cardin likes the white nylons that have swept Paris.

It's no news that ererything moves in a Cardin collection, but the clothes are more agile than ever this time. Coats flip with slit hems. They are very loose and easy. Most of them are shown open and meant lo be worn that way. For even-ing long scarfs blow from necklines and hemlines flutter with bias-cut flounces, tattered hems and just the weightlessness of the utterly luxurious chiffon and organza prints and gauzy flowered nets. Cardin obviously believes ln wider shoulders, but he makes a gag of the whole thing by extending them with button-on flaps that extend over the shoulder bones. His serious sults, which will reach a large public translated into ready-towear, are mostly coats with shirts, skirts or pants. Cardin, who never used to like them, shows more pants than any other Paris designer.

Some of the things to remember: The short little white tunic piped in navy and worn over hot pants: the huge hats that drooped to the shoulder blades and were worn with short, flowered chiffon dresses, over bloomers; the long, flowered organza tunics over sequin jump suits and the monotone, long tunics over flowered jump suits or zouave pants. Cardin's collection was a blockbuster, but what the switch back from ankle length to minis will do to couture prestige is another story. It was dark at the top of the stairs where Chanel used to sit with her friends while the opening went on, but Chanel's last collection was beautiful. Vir-tually finished before she died three weeks ago, it is probably the most beautiful col-lection she had made in the 16 years since she made her come-In the audience was Mrs. Georges Pompidou, wearing a

Also lined up along the celebrity row were Marie-Hélène de Rothschild with Baron Alexis de Rede; young Baronne Ed-mond de Rothschild, Mrs. mond de Rothschild, Mrs. Gerald van der Kemp, wife of the curator of Versailles. Fashion itself has come back to some of Chanel's early looks.

For the first time many of her dresses, like the simple pleated crepes and a few pleated chif-ions under loose tweed coats were as successful as ber suits. As always, Chanel's skirts stopped just below the knees. Her models wore their hair brushed back and tied in little bows, and the familiar two-tone pumps and gold chains were all present. Chanel's latest tweeds are in the pink. There are pink and white checks and plaids and a real raspberry. One of the knockouts is the pink tweed coat over a flesh pink chiffon dress with a pleated skirt.

Sure to be successful is the red Chanel sult with a closefitting sweater-like jacket. The Ford of the season, though, is likely to be the white shantung with the typical red and blue edging. Let's face it, though: There are dozens of beauties to

There were more celebrities than real fashion at Nina Ricci this afternoon. Notes From Sweden....

An Era in Opera May Be Ending

By Lars Gustafsson STOCKHOLM (NYT).—This season Goran Gentele leaves his position as head of the Royal Opera in Stockholm for the Metropolitan. In all probability this mean: that a rather bright period in the long history of the Swedish national opera house has come to an

The time span between 1936 and 1970, or, to put it in terms of singers, from Birgit Nilsson and Nicolal Gedda to Helge Brilioth and Barbro Ericson, has been one of remarkable artistic quality, activity and renovation, attributed not least of all to Mr. Gentele's interest in an to Mr. Gentele's interest in cooperating with the writers and composers of the present Swedish generation.

For most of the Stockholm public, however, Mr. Gentele first became a topic of con-versation at the beginning of the 50s when he was brought over from the Royal Dramatic Theater, where he had started as an actor, and soon became a director of the opera house. Mid-'50s

People still speak of the storm of enthusiasm that greet-ed his staging of Verdi's "Ballo in Maschera" in the mid-50s. The late poet Erik Lindegren re-adapted the libretto to the original story on which Verdi's opera was based, the murder of King Gustaf III in an opera mosquerade in 1792. Mr. Gentele made the production into an absolutely unique mixture of Verdi and 18th-century Sweden.

Stockholm is losing not only an extremely gifted opera leader but also a remarkable director with the departure of Mr. Gentele. Whether the Cultural Ministry will be able to fill the gap left by this latest trans-Atlantic brain drain remains to be seen.

It is ironical that only a few years ago the government, which sometimes takes rather inexplicable views of the administration of the state thenters, seemed reluctant to prolong Mr. Gentele's appointment.

Perhaps the Royal Opera of Stockholm will now find itself in a crisis. The Royal Dramatic Theater, on the other hand, seems to live in one constantly. That does not mean that it is a bad theater, but rather that its good performances are extremely good and the bad ones so utterly bad that no provincial road company would

Much of this arises from the neurotic atmosphere enveloping any theater that has such soaring ambitions and is dominated by so many strong personalities. Some nights ago the theater staged an absolutely impossible verse-drama by the secretary of the Swedish Academy on the theme of King Herod of Jerusalem. Only the hats worn by the actors prevented the public from mistaking the cast for pieces of plaster. Last year a left-radical street-theater group was invited to give a play dealing with the situation in the northern provinces and made a complete success of it. Nice things about the theater are its unpredictability and its extremely good

One of them is Ingmar Bergman, whose performance of Strindberg's 'Dream Play." made in a soft, everyday atmosphere very different from Max Reinhardt, was last year's

Another is All Sjoberg, born in 1903, educated by the best

German expressionists in the 20s, less known outside Sweden than Mr. Bergman, profoundly miginal, and volcanic in his imagination.

Arcane Bite The staging of a production by Mr. Sjoberg always seems to be a sort of arcane rite or ordeal that keeps the theater as a whole introvertedly mys-terious and very near to a collective nervous breakdown for months.

Weeks before the first night of a Sjoberg production the theater seems to vibrate with occult powers, the most unbe-lievable rumors circulate.

And in nine out of ten cases, what comes out of this turnoil is a performance so profound, clear and vivid that you understand that you have never se that drams before, even if it is Shakespeare's "Corlolanus" or "Branda Tomten," ("The Burned Ground"), one of Strindberg's "chamber plays," well known throughout Scandinavia.

Only a Sjoberg could in-terrupt a Strindberg chamber play with an intermesso. The whole ensemble, solemnly seated on chairs, had just read poetry for 40 minutes and, after the musical break, just want on, symbolically speaking, with a small smile.

European theater in general at this time is becoming more and more entangled in political struggle. Managers are heing discharged and repertories are coming into conflict with theater boards as clashes erupt more frequently between insti-tutional goals and the ambitions theater as a political instrument However, this type of conflict has not yet escalated to the level it has reached in West Germany because radical theater in Sweden has been working more and more independently of the regular institutions.

A group of technically very advanced young players, led by Gunnar Chrisnder, has developed a very interesting tech-nique of combining social rearch and theater. The group visits the mine fields of Kiruna or the automobile factories of Volvo. They interview workers about how they view their work and living conditions. Then, like a mirror, the actors reflect the workers' situation back to them in a play of dialogue and song.

Their last performance, about the Volvo workers, however, stirred violent conflicts with their touring organization, Riksteatern. There were great difficulties with localities, disputes in the press and, last but not least, a short but angry wild strike in the Volvo factories at Gotenburg.

"A Play on Volvo" deals with the speed of the conveyor belts, sanitary conditions and the pressure on the workers exerted by the ambitions to raise production. It was all very discomforting for all the official institutions of Gotenburg that are proud of their big car factory. The play seems to have accomplished something nnusual in theater: it had an effect on reality. Some workshops were on strike hours the day after the performance,

Ballet in New York. Béjart's Debut

By Clive Barnes

NEW YORK, Jan. 26.—Lovers of good dancers found a lot of good dancers to love at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, where last night the Belgian national ballet, which calls it-self the Ballet of the 20th Century, made its U.S. dehut,

This Brussels-based company. under the artistic direction of the French choreographer Maurice Béjart, contains some lovely, beautifully trained clas-sic dancers. Indeed the boys, even though a few are too glamorously self-conscious for some tastes, are among the best in Western Europe. What they have to dance is another, less effective story.

French Tradition

Béjart is a classic choreographer in the old French tra-dition of Serge Lifar and Roland Petit. He uses standard classroom steps with great freedom if less imagination, but and a shrewd, often telling, way with balletic gimmicks.

in France, Canada and places like that, the Bejart company is regarded as the most avant of the avant-garde. This, I suspect, is a mistake unlikely to be made in Brooklyn, but the dancers are very engaging.

The best work on the openingnight program was the final "Bhakti." This reminded me of a work I saw years ago with Alicia Markova and the Indian dancer Ram Gopal It is Indian in feeling and mood, it uses Indian music, but the dancing is classic, with Indien overtones. It is rather like the Spanish element in the "Don Quixote pas de deux," interesting but not elementel.

Three young men worshiping universal love face three different incarnations of the divinity, who each have a love affair, with ladies who are symbols of purity, laveliness and vitality.

It is an extremely well-staced work, with the three due's (which do become a little monotonous, set within the framework of priests of pligrams at their slow devotions. Unfortunately, the choregraphy never makes that essential fusion between Occidental and Oriental dance that Balanchine achieves so brilliantly in "Bugakin" E what we are too frequently left with is a simple classic par de deux with a few Indian cestures or movements simply grafted

Sozanne Farrell. Miss Farrell, dancing in New York for the first time since she left the New York City Ballet in a cloud of rosin, was seen partnered by Daniel Lommel in a: Béjart pas de deux called "Explica." Oddly enough, this dance, set to music by Tadeus: Baird, did not seem at all erotic -particularly on a Brooklyn stage accustomed to the pagen rituals of Martha Grahsm. was all very bland, bot Miss Farrell, long legs, ponytail hairdo and magnificent half-stepped from Shakespeare's pages in all his fascinating complexity. Barrymore had the noble presence; he had the voice and he had the necessary histrionic genlus. We still await his successor.

Second Effort

Jean-Louis Trintignant, of the cinema, tried Hamlet ten years ago and he is now bravely making a second essay at the Théatre de la Musique. Visually. he is well-suited to the part. His comportment is graceful and he can convey the regal manner and disdain. Vocally, alas, he is ill-equipped and neither his speech nor performance succeeds in crashing the footlight barrier with any semblance of dramatic force. He might have made an excellent Hamlet on the silent screen for looking the prince is his only attribute. He is Hamlet with Shakespeare left out. Indeed, in the current production Shakespeare has been almost entirely deleted. The lines that Trintignant utters are not those of the Bard, but those of Jacques Copeau and Suzanne Bing who are responsible for the inadequate French translation. The majestic organ tones nf Shakespeare's verse find no discernible echo in this adaptation and the ideas rolced in the original text are flatly and awkwardly restated. Aside from Bulle Ogier's pictorial version of Ophelia, Gérard Dournel and Alain Foures who made the most of the grave diggers, and Michel Gudin as the Player King, the cast seems bent on mutiny instead of support. The Gertrude and Claudius are wooden and barely audible, the Polonius would have been dismissed even from Corse Payton's stock company and the Laertes muffed his lines on opening night. Jacques Frantz as Horatio, though better, is so tall that he distorts the stage picture as the prince's boon companion. The staging has the air of having been directed by a color-blind policeman, its traffic moving with abrupt fits end starts, always against the theatrical

Art in Rome-

Graphics by Albrecht Dürer. Palazzo Braschi, Piazza Pantaleo 10, until Feb. 20.

These 133 engravings and woodcuts from 1492-1526 are a trip in every sense of the word. Dürer was born in Nuremberg 500 years ago, traveled widely. first as a journeyman, then as a master, up to the Netherlands and down to Italy, became profoundly involved in the new approach to nature and art thrown open by the humanist ideas and explorers' discoveries of the high Renaissance. These black and whites, far more vivid than his more studied oils, convey a sense of a rich and varied world. The subject matter, religious or allegorical, is accepted as a convention and holds the scene together, but the real action is in the margins, in the texture of those most skillfully incised grooves: a medieval ruin looming on a far hilltop, swarms of migratory, birds, feathery Manmesque foliage, a robin in the hand of the "Christkind," the face of his young mother sweet and true à la Giambellini, her rippling robes, the grass under

The least ambitious smaller engravings-of St. George, a mermald. the prodigal son in a pigsty, several nativities, the "Marienleben" series are the most enjoyable. One comes away keeping an after-image of Dürer's, open vistas of fantasy and wonder for a long time.

Don Aquilino. Bronzes. American Academy. Via A. Masina

5, until Feb. 28. As with ell good art, it is not easy to define the style of Aquilino's sculptures: it is his own. When he was a painter, some-what influenced by Matisse and Morandi, his main concern was with light and it still is—except that for the past two years he has used form instead of color. Torsos of female figures emerge from darkness with an easy flow, simplified to their basic curves but not as much as Arp's more abstracted allusions. They are burnished to a quick golden smoothness which is neither bland nor automatic, something which often happens in other contemporary sculpture. The reliefs are the most beautiful (pears, anemones, envelopes); mat surfaces alternate with shinyness and are gracefully balanced. To pose some objects before their own reflections in mirrors might seem an ambi-tious proposition, but Aquilino solves these intricacles slowly, lovingly, as only someone trained as a painter could. The draw-ings, pure and mellow, their milky whites imperceptibly turning to smoky blacks, are about sunlight too. The problem of ex-

Don Aguilino's 'Paper Bag and Twn Pears.'

There is no rush, flambovance or urge for the monumental in these things and it is for that reason that Aquilino's quiet work excels. - .

Drawings. Galler a Trifalco. V.

Ventaggio 22 a, until Jan. 28. This new gallery is off to a refreshing start, showing not only well-known painters but unknown ones, young and old, all of them alive, practicing that best of all methods, draw ing with pen or pencil, to clarify pictorial ideas. Verrusio, the only "new figurative" painter I know of in Rome, who has a certain kinship with Wayne Thiebaud in America, exhibits a most remarkable drawing of a few prossic belongings scatter ed over a table top carefully delineated. Early, surprisingly realistic studies by Mirko and Omiccioli, and recent ones by Calabria, Checchi, Melone and this lively offering.

Ugo Tespriere. Schneider Gallery Rampa Mignanelli 10, until Jan 30 This is nice straight realism by someone who has long studied other painters with pas-sionate interest. The lady posing in a black slip, the old aunt in her rocker under her throw, the artist himself and his wife with drawn-up knees, all sit plumb in the middle of the picture and look at you straight on, which somehow makes them contemporary. The big or complicated features are searchingly observed and sometimes the paint. In tentative shades, is applied awkwardly. But there is charm awkwardy. But there is charm in this guileless attitude, this pure belief that if you look at your subject hard enough and do your best it has to come out right in the end-and-well, here it really does.

Franco Lastraioli. Galleria Levi, V. Vantaggio 12, until Jan. 28. Pragile flowers and fruit pitted against voracions machine robots, the last stand of living things against monster technology—these surrealist fantasies with a message are painted neatly in bright insect colors and could very well serve as posters for ecology.

If you don't know your way around the U.S.A., make sure your bank does.

The high rate of return realized by many overseas companies that have invested in the U.S.—plus the tech-nological and marketing experience they've gained—is enough to whet the appente of any businessman.

But while the successes have been spectacular, so have the failutes, when investors have moved in without adequate investment and financial knowledge.

How do you get this knowledge?

Trust Northern. The Northern Trust Bank, located at the hub of U.S. business, has provided comprehensive corporate financial services to companies from coast to coast for more than three quarters of a century.

business contacts, we can help you determine which course is best suited to your individual objectives. If it is a joint venture or an acquisition, we can help you locate and evaluate candidates . . . perhaps from among the many corporations whose objectives have already been communicated to us. If another course is indicated, we can provide thorough financial consultation on the alternatives available. For your business or personal investment management, our trust department—one of the largest in the country-can be of great assistance.

If the U.S. figures in your company's future, why not ask about The Northern Trust at your own bank. Or contact Kenneth P. Kinney, Vice President in our Chicago office, or W. James Armstrong, Vice President at our London branch.

Trust Northern... All your money matters matter to us.

BRIDGE. By Alan Truscott

North naturally became enthusiastic when his partner freely bid spades at the threelevel following a pre-emptive overcall of three diamonds Blackwood revealed that the partnership held all the aces, and North took a plunge into seven spades. Unless South head exactly Axx in hearts, which would lead almost certainly to a disaster, there was sure to be a reasonable play for 13 tricks. West led the diamond queen, which was won by the ace in dummy, and South pulled trump in two rounds. The contract now hinged on guessing the location of the heart queen. South cashed his two club winners and reviewed the information at his disposal, East's weak jump to the three-level was known to be based on a broken suit headed by the king, so a seven-card suit was much more likely than a six-card suit. East had so far shown four black cards, which left, apparently, two cards unaccounted for. His original distribution. might have been 2-2-7-2 or

South judged correctly that the second distribution was more likely. He knew that a preemptive bld would not appeal to East if he lacked a singleton, but there was a stronger reason. If East had begun with two clubs. West had begun with seven-and he would probably have opened the bidding with three clubs at favorable vuinerability. On this reasoning, South cashed the heart ace and captured West's queen with a finesse to make the grand slam. When the hand was replay-d, West boldly opened the bidding with three clubs. North doubled for take-out, and East supplemented his partner's preemptive action by bidding five clubs. South jumped to spaces and North passed.

With this bidding, the de-clarer had no reason to guess the heart situation accurately and made only 12 tricks,

RADICAL PERIODICALS IN THE UNITED STATES, 1890-1960

Reprinted by Greenwood Reprint Corp., Westport, Conn. 410 volumes.

> Reviewed by Israel Sbenker Part two of a two-part review

NTRODUCING the Catholic Worker in the Greenwood Reprint series of radical publications. Dwight Macdonald en-gagingly recalls these small distinctions and big differences so familiar to the world of radicals, "14th Street cafeteria savants who could distinguish at the drop of a coffee spoon between Manuilsky and Maya-kovsky, Dan and Denikin, kovsky, Dan and Denikin, Malenkov, Martov, Miliukov, Muralov and Muranov."

"Anong the leftist periodicals of my time," writes Mr. Macdonald, who rarely drops his coffee spoon, "the Catholic Worker is unique in combining longevity with consistency."

The till costs a negroy a conv.

It still costs a penny a copy. By Mr. Macdonald's calculation, which he admits is "factless," it would have cost $4.32 to buy all the individual numbers of the Catholic Worker as they came out. Greenwood's price for the reprints: $435. But one can hardly object, since the reprint offers the pleasure of Mr. Macdonald's introduction and a preface by founder-editor

Dorothy Day.

Mr. Macdonald's own Politics was equally rich in radical values. Hannah Arendt, who wrote the introduction to the reprint, credits Macdonald with discovering Simons Well and lending currency to unknowns such as C. Wright Mills, Albert Camus and Bruno Bettelheim. Miss Arendt reports that "so many of its articles, comments, and factual reports read as though they were written today or yesterday or yesteryear, except that the concerns and perplexities of a little magazine with a peak circulation of something over 5,000 have become the daily bread of news-papers and periodicals with mass circulation."

Daniel Bell, who dislikes labels, wrote the introduction for Modern Review, which he briefly edited while working to more lucrative effect as an editor on Fortune, the non-radical monthly which quite properly is passed over by Greenwood. Mr. Bell, who now teaches sociology at Harvard and co-edits The Public Interest (also not reprinted by Greenwood), writes that the moving spirit of Modern Review was Raphael Abramovitch, "one of that marvelous generation of Russian idealists who had suffered jail in their youth, brief glory as revolutionary leaders, and privation in exile, yet who continued to dedicate themselves selflessly—after thirty years of wandering it was all they hadi—to ideas. History for them was not the history of the victors-how could it be, but of the 'correct' interpreta-tion of theory; and it was to that end that the Modern Review was dedicated."

Modern Review (1947-1950) should not be confused with Modern Quarterly (1923-1940). which published pieces by Bertrand Russell

Wilson, John Dewey and Sherwood Anderson. Modern Quar-terly should not be mistaken for Marrist Quarterly, whose three issues included work by Sidney Hook, Bertram Wolfe, Louis Hacker, Meyer Schapiro, Lewis Corey and Corliss La-

Nor should it be mistaken for Marxian, since that journal's tract record was even less glorious, running to only two appearances, both in 1921. This was two issues less than Marxist managed. Under Harry Walton, who had earlier edited Marxian, Marxist succeeded in Marker, Market succeeded in prolonging publishing agonies all the way from 1925 to 1927. Cin "The Roots of American Communism," Theodore Draper has written that "It is some-times hard to determine whether a radical movement exists for the sake of its organ or vice versa.") Hopes were high in Communist International, whose inaugural issue (1919) called on French, English, American, Italian, Serbian, Rumanian and Polish "workmen and soldiers": "Turn your bayonets against your own bourgeoisie! Your enemy is in your own country." A number of radical publications were cries from a single heart. Wilshire's was a oneman Socialist journal—published by a wealthy land speculator between 1900 and 1915. Dr. Robinson's Voice in the Wilderness (1917-1920) cried out the beauties of Socialist doctrine. Upton Sinclair's A Monthly Magazine for a Clean Peace and the Internation lasted for 10 issues (1918-1919) and was all Sinclair. Debs Magazine (1921-1923) became a principal source for the writings of Eugene V. Debs, and its editorials urged his release from prison. He pacifism in violation of the 1918 Espionage Act. Like Foster, he ran for President—five times as candidate of the Socialist party-and once got 6 percent of the popular vote. The Greenwood Reprin: Cors.' percentages are even better, and the radical venture is already decidedly in the black. Most of the sets were purchased by American libraries, including one in Texas which-with a know-your-enemy rationalization—used funds earmarked for anti-Communist purposes. Eleveri sets were sold to Japanese

had been convicted of wartims

libraries. Scholars interested in particular titles or volumes may purchase them individually. Prices range from $10 for the complete one-volume set of the nonviolent revolutionary Alternative to $1,275 for Labor Action.

Greenwood itself plays no favorites, as may become clearer when it completes another ambitious reprinting program: "Conservative Periodicals in the United States, 1890-1960." Mr. Shenker, a reporter for

The New York Times, wrote this review for The Times Book

Postal Vote To Decide Ski Future

Brundage Polling 90 IOC Members

By Michael Katz PARIS, Jan. 26 (NYT).-The igibility of the ten Alpine skiers squalified from the 1972 Winter ames at Sapporo, Japan, by very Brundage will be decided by ember of the International lympie Committee

Brundage, the 83-year-old IOC who disqualified the ders for having taken part in a mmercial ski camp last summer Mammoth Mountain, Calif., has nt a questionnaire to the 90 C members asking if they rought the skiers should be

But while Brundage retreated om his unilateral stand taken November, he strongly attacked lpine skiing again. His letter intained the key question. "Ara e Alpine skiers who participated the commercial camp igible for the Olympics?" But it so had three loaded questions neerning Alpine skiing and six iges of "information" on the ort he has long attacked for not nforming to Olympic rules on nateurism

Four Questions Brundage also asked the IOC

The four questions were re-ased at IOC headquarters in ausanne, Switzerland, last night. oday, an IOC spokesman said the est question, on the eligibility of Mammoth Mountain skiers ould constitute a "postal vote" the members and would de-rmine whether the racers could articipate at Sapporo. The reilt of the vote probably will not articipate at Sapporo. The realt of the vote probably will not be released until the TOC executive

Ten days ago, Marc Hodler, that

Sub-4 Mile Eludes Millrose Director

NEW YORK, Jan. 26.-The phone rang at Millrose headquarters last week and the operator reported that Jim Ryun, the 23-year-old miler, was returning the call of Fred Schmertz, the 82-year-old director of Friday's showcase Millrose foot-racing carnival in Madison Square Garden in New Schmertz does such a nifty job of salesmanship that the one fellow he most convinces of the superiority of his product is himself. By the time the meet arrives the bemused Fred has talked himself into expecting photo finishes and world records in every event.

"If Jim agrees to compete in he Wanamaker Mile," said Fred," what will I do with him? My six-man field is already

Fred did not have to juggle his field. Being a polite young man, Ryun was merely making a courtesy call before heading for San Francisco and the start of a comeback after a 19-month competitive absence. But the Millrose mile still has sparkle without him because five of the six contestants have all broken through the four-minute bar-

But no runner ever has crack-ed that barrier in the Wan-amaker Mile and that has to be an extraordinary state of af-fairs. Ever since Roger Bannister invented the four-minute mile in 1954, the ever enthusiastic Schmertz has been dreaming about it for his beloved meet Some have come close but it has been no cigar.

Tom O'Hara usually ran only as fast as was necessary to win and he was pushed to the brink in 1964 when be won the mile in 4:00.6. How much slower is that than a mile in 3:59.9? Snap your fingers. It would represent the time span. Marty Liquori of Villanova also brushed against the barrier with 4:00,8 in 1969.

As of this moment, Liquori and Ryun are presumed to be America's top hopes for an Olympic 1,500-meter championship at Munich next year. No one can guess whether or not they will meet indoors. Two major opportunities would be in the Olympic Invitation Meet at the Garden 17 Feb. 19 and tha National Championships of the amateur Athletic Union, also at the Garden one week later. Liquori undoubtedly will compete in both. Will Ryun?

Jogged Away "I'm ready for him or any-body else," says Liquori, the fiercest of competitors. Twice-beaten by this tough-fibered Villanova senior, Ryun broke off a mile race against Liquori during the National AAU champion-away into temporary retirement. This should be a full indoor season for Liquori, his last big one for a while. He will be quite content to let go with the old college try for Villanova and Jumbo Jim Elliott, his coach. But next June this hard-driving collegian will have graduated and there will be no allout effort on boards during the winter of an Olympic year.

With Munich in the offing a more cautious approach is er "rally recommended

Some of the Millrose contestants already have Olympic gold medals: Lee Evans, 490 meters; Bob Seagren, pole vault, and Willie Davenport, high hurdles. But one of the best runners in the entire meet, a man invincible at his best distance of 600 yards, has no Olympic dream beckoning him.

WASHINGTON.—Once again it is midterm, and parents are receiving those messages from headmasters about their boys away at school. Like this

matics he still spends far too much time alone with himself. Frankly, ws would like to see

Dick et more of the tea dances, circulating with a wider variety of companions than his present circle of Henry Kissinger. We also think it is time Dick settled down. Last semes ter he never took his jaw out of the law-and-order books. Now he talks as though the idea of putting us all in jail had never crossed his mind. This one went to Mrs. Rose

Kennedy: "Teddy remains an openhearted lad, but he takes the affection of his classmates too much for granted, with the re-sult that he sometimes fails to prepare himself for important tests. We strongly suggest tutoring for Teddy next semester in mathematics and politics." And this one to the home of William P. Rogers: "Frankly, many of us here sometimes feel that Bill would be happier some place else. Or has he alresdy gone some place else? We haven't seen him for the past two semesters sod a member of the faculty, when Bill's name was brought up at a meeting last week, asked: Who is William P. Rogers?" The Muskies, up in Maine, will be advised as follows:

"Edmund's critical success in our November television dra-matics show obviously lifted his spirits. We want to do everythiog possible to help him overcome his natural tendency to brood, but we fail to see how his carrying on in funny photographs from Russia and Arabia can possibly help with his major in sahitation,"

For a lad who was last year's 'Man Most Likely to Be the Fun of the Party,' Spiro seems to need cheering up.

"If you agree, we might have our athletic department set up a special gym program aimed at better ventilating his lungs." The following went to Wis-

"Mel Laird! How many years have we been sending home these little reports on Mel? Almost a lifetime, it seems, yet Mel is still a mere stripling. Always in the past it has been such a pleasure to write home about Mel. His industriousness, his brilliance, his application, department—all those A's. This semester, we feel obliged to note that Mel may—and who ever thought anyone would say this of him—that Mel may be in over his head? May we suggest that he be urged to drop Cambodia at once? It is, after all, only a minor subject, and nobody, not even Mel, can be expected to do everything brilliantly. Shakespeare, they say, couldn't piay the violin."

And this one to Minnesota: 'Unusual though it is to send home a report on a student who has been here less than a week. We must notify you once again that Hubert continues to talk class. Will you please remind Hubert once again of the condition on which we sgreed to accept him back among us?

Discussing the price and taste of beer in front of the Sportsman Inn.

The Sullen Mood in the Pubs of Carlisle, England

By Bernard Weinraub CARLISLE, England (NYT). -In the Sportsman Ino, the men in cloth caps sipped beer at noon in a sullen mood.

Thomas Tweddle, the manager, poured a pint of beer and slammed it on the counter: "It's a bloody shame," he said, "The price of the beer is going to go up and the quality's going to go down, and we're all going to suffer.

Nearby, Murdoch Alexander Jack, a 47-year-old town employee, ordered a cheese sand-wich and a second pint of beer. Tragic-that's what I think it is." ha murmured. "The next thing you know they'll tell us to put a carpet on the floor and wear ties."

Conversation

Along the meandering streets and in the pubs of this city, 300 miles north of London, conversation focused upon a single subject: the government's decision of last week to bow out of the pub-keeping business and sell 206 state-owned pubs, taverns and hotels, most of them in Carlisle.

In making the move-which represents a first act of dena-tionalization by Prime Minister Heath—the Home Office said that management of pubs was no longer "an appropriate activity" for the government, The sale of the pubs and hotels, which earned a profit of nearly $490,000 last year, is expected to Britain's major brewers, who already own nearly all the pubs in the rest of Britain.

These days most publicans are no more than tenants or salaried managers. The date of the sale has not yet been set. Angered at the move, the factory workers, railwaymen and store-owners of Carlisle gathered in such pubs as the Bluebell, Caledonian, Pheasant and King's Head. They grumbled that the low cost of a pint of beer—now 2 shillings, or 24 cents—would elimb to 30 cents, the average price in the rest of Britain.

"We have no fancy pubs in Carlisle," said Colin Kelton. a striking postal worker, at the Caledonian Inn. "It's a railway town and we're working people; The pubs mean a hell of a lot to us and we're bloody worried that they're going to change and become dearer." An even deeper worry in Carlisle is that the taste of the locally brewed beer, The Palate, will change as soon as large breweries move in, "It's a slightly different taste, a special one," said Kathy Pointon, a cheerful and matronly barmaid in the Caledonian Inn. while a dart game began nearby.

on the floor and wear ties.' "It's what people grow up on.
A brewer will ship his beer from Manchester and what'll you have? A disappointing beer." At the King's Head on Fisher Street, Larry Bell, a 51-year-old fish merchant, shook his head sadly. "Every - night for 32 years I come in at half-past 5, have a pint of bitter, go home for my meal and then come back here until 10 o'clock. "I drink ten, maybe 12 pints a night," he said. "And now the quality is going to change and what am I supposed to do?" The government has held a liquor monopoly in Carlisle since 1916, when munitions workers moved into the town on the Scottish border, They earned good wages but had little to do in their spare time except drink. Temperance advocates began a "Drink Costs Lives" campaign and the British leader, David Lloyd-George, proclaimed: "We are fighting Germany, Austria and drink, and as far as I can see the greatest of these three deadly foes is drink."

In taking over the pubs, the government felt managers would be under no pressure to push liquor and would be able to clean up pubs that had turnsures continued for years. Until ently it was against the rules to stand at the bar-the customer had to sit. No ona was allowed to buy a round of drinks. Each customer purchas ed his own and could buy only one at a time. No hard liquor was sold on Saturdays.

"Just a few years ago you couldn't have a dart board on the wall, no dominoes, no singing," said Mr. Tweddle. "Now some pubs here even have a mixed room' upstairs for dancing with the ladles."

The 172 state-owned pubs in Carlisle—together with 34 pubs in Gretna and Cromarty in nearby Scotland—employ 1,500 people. But most of them will probably work for the private companies that take over.

Petitions

Since the government's an-nouncement, petitions have be-gun in Carlisle to keep the state plibs, and elected officials have bitterly attacked the Conservative government.

"This is one of the rewards the government is giving to the brewers for their generosity to the Tory party over the past two years," said Ronald Lewis, Labor member of Parliament from Carlisle.

Mr. Lewis conceded that he was a nondrinker. "Seeing that drinking is an accepted fact of modern life, if we have got to have it, I would much rather we had it under public control than under private," he said.

City on charges of stealing a car was an Il-year-old boy who police said "drives like a pro." The boy, identified only as Joes because of his age, was released in his parents custody while police investigated his weeklong odyssey of joy rides in the stolen car. The ride culminating in his arrest was a ten-hour outing with four little friends, the youngest aged four. Police said Joey had sat on a pillow and other kids' coats so he could see over the dashboard. He obtained gas by speeding away from service stations without paying the bill. "He even wore dark glasses at night so he could see better in the snow," said Detective James Keenan. "He was a pro, Fd say."
